- 1 Overlapping Underlapping Creating Superiority Imagine a wave crashing against the shore The overlapping runs of your fullbacks mirroring the cresting wave pull the oppositions defensive line out of position creating space for your midfielders to exploit
- 2 Simultaneously the underlapping movements of your central midfielders like the undertow provide support and create passing lanes This constant ebb and flow is a key ingredient in unlocking defensive lines
- 2 Creating and Exploiting Space Positional play isnt about blindly possessing the ball its about strategically occupying space Your players must understand how to create space for themselves and for their teammates This involves intelligent positioning anticipating movements and making decisive passes that split open defenses Think of it as creating pockets of vulnerability within the opposing teams formation
- 3 Triangle Passing Networks The formation isnt static its a dynamic network of triangles These interconnected passing lanes ensure that theres always a readily available passing option reducing reliance on individual brilliance and fostering collective responsibility These triangles provide security facilitating quick precise passes and limiting the risk of turnovers
- 4 Building from the Back The Foundation of Control Building possession from the back isnt merely about passing its about controlling the tempo dictating the flow of the game Your goalkeeper and defenders must be comfortable under pressure able to make precise short passes that initiate attacks and bypass the first line of pressure
- 5 Adaptability and Flexibility Positional play isnt a rigid system its a framework It demands adaptability Your players need to react to the opponents formations adjust their positioning dynamically and exploit any weaknesses that emerge This requires constant communication and intuitive understanding of the games flow

Anecdote I once coached a team that struggled with passing accuracy under pressure Instead of
